BUSY BLACK HAND CAUSES PANIC BY SIXTEENTH BOMB

Explosion in Hallway Follows Two Demands for $1,000 Blackmail

DOORS ARE BLOWN OFF.

Occupants of Tenement and Neighbors Stampeded to the Street.

Following two demands that he pay $1,000 to the Black Hand, both of which were ignored, Rutilio Colarusso, who lives on the third floor of No. 144 First avenue with his wife, Marie, and six children, was frightened from his slumhere early this morning by the terrific explosion of a bomb in the hallway outside his rooms. It was the sixteenth Black Hand bomb explosion in New York City since Aug. 6.

Three doors were blown from their hinges, the plaster was knocked down along the hall, several windows broken and a hole a foot square ripped through Four families live in the building, a four-story tenement. The ground floor is occupied by Charles Vassmon, a grocer. In the basement Colarusso has a coal and wood cellar. He also runs a place of the same sort at No. 608 Bast Ninth Colarusso has lived at the First avenue address for seven years, and says he got his first Black Hand letter last July, just after he opened the Ninth street place. He received a notification from the postal authorities that a letter, insufficiently stamped, was held for him in Brooklyn. Colarusso sent the postage and received a written notice to the coact that it had been decreed that he pay $1,000 to the Mano Nero. No place was designated, however, where the money should be peld, and Colarusso made up the mind that it was a joke.

Last week another letter come respecting the domand for $1,000. Both leters were signed "blame Nero," and the second added that unless Colorness paid at once his wife and six shildren would be killed. Still, Colorness says, there were no directions how or when or where the money was to be paid.

BOMB PLACED IN HALLWAY AFTER PARTY.

AFTER PARTY. Last night she Colarussus had a party. It broke up shout it o'closts and overphody went home. The junites, Carl Leper, had looked the frent door as usual, and Colarusso had to go down and let the company out. Then, he says, he looked the door again and want the bomb had a key to the front door. Mary Vassmon, who sleeus on the second floor, says that about 1 o'clock she heard stealthy steps going upstalds, but thought it was one of the Colaruseo children who had been out late. A few minutes later the footsteps came down again, much more rapidly| This struck her as unusual, and she opened her door and looked out. No one was to be seen. She remembers that she heard a faint sizzling noise from the hallway above, but says she paid little atte to it. She had hardly closed the door before the explosion came.

Disorder and wild confusion followed the detonation. The hallway was so filled with fine particles of disiodged plaster that the frightened tenants thought the house was on fire and set up screams for help. Polleeman Martin of the Fifth street station, however, of the Fifth street station, however, prevented a fire alarm being turned in, and the reserves quieted the neighborhood after an hour of turnuit.

Colarusso denies that he is in any way related to Antonio Colarusso of No. 185 First avenue, where a Black Handbomb was exploded on Aug. 17 just after
